Self-Assessment Shae Dobko React Components

In this assignment, I think the biggest obstacle was simply starting it. Being away from class due to being unwell made the task feel more intimidating than it actually was. The hardest part of working with React was that when I looked up solutions online, I found many different examples and answers compared to what we were learning in class. I'm guessing this is because React is a large coding language with many ways to approach problems.

One thing I think I did well was taking the time to follow the structure I believed the assignment was asking for and then trying another approach I found online. This helped me improve my understanding and gave me more confidence for future assignments.

If I had more time, I think I would try to figure out how to make the list work properly. I feel like that would have been a good challenge to take on.

Overall, I would give myself an 80/100. I always feel like I could do better or learn more, but I'm proud of the effort I put into this assignment despite the challenges.